Dear Mr Courtley,

We have been contacted by constituents who are concerned about the ongoing dispute between Fujitsu Services and Amicus, which has led to industrial action at your Manchester offices. When we have written to you previously, you have passed our letters to Roger Leek, your Group Human Resources Director, who has sent us a standard reply. This response has not allayed the concerns of our constituents, and we note that the dispute continues to be unresolved. A delegation of strikers recently visited Downing Street, parliament and the DTI. Given the concerns of our constituents and the fact that Fujitsu is a major supplier of IT services to the government, we are keen to see a swift resolution to the dispute.

We are therefore seeking an urgent meeting between you, a senior officer from Amicus, and members of both negotiating teams, to see if we can broker proper dialogue and help to resolve this situation. Tony Lloyd has asked Amicus to refrain from issuing the planned notice of further strike action so that the meeting can take place in favourable conditions. Amicus has indicated it intends to do this, so I hope that you will respond by arranging the meeting very quickly.

A number of us had been seeking a debate in parliament about the dispute. We now intend to refrain from doing so for the time being to allow a window of opportunity for the meeting to find a mutually acceptable resolution to the dispute.

We look forward to hearing from you in the very near future.

Yours sincerely

Tony Lloyd
